Philippines Ministry Update

2 Weeks & Counting!

I've been reading lately about global missions, about the needs, the people, their struggles and their faith that God will send an answer to their prayers. And for some, I believe I am that answer. That's why I'm going to the Philippines. I'm not going for the sake of travel, to see old friends or even to add something to TSC's ministry schedule this year. I'm going because I believe God told me to GO! Because I believe I will be an answer to someone's prayer. Because I will give a hug that someone has desperately wanted and never received. Because I will flash a smile to a stranger that needs to know someone sees them – that they aren't invisible. I feel that Christ in me shines brighter when I am in developing nations and perhaps that is because there seems to be more darkness. There is more of a need, therefore I feel like I make more of a difference. But the bottom line reason I go is not to speak, it's not to travel, it's not to 'experience'... it's for people, those that God has planned for me to IMPACT on a specific day at a specific time. I'm going for them because I have no idea how great the ripples of my impact will be in their lives, their families, and ultimately... their nation!

Sometimes I feel like all I do is ask for money. It seems pretty basic that instead, I should share my heart. I should tell you why I feel called to a certain place, what I plan to do when I'm there. The difference Christ can make with me passionately by his side. Please join in prayer with me over the ministry that will take place and the lives touched and changed forever!
